NPPA cuts stent prices again

VEENA MANI
New Delhi, 12 February

Exactly one year after slashing coronary stent prices by as much as 85 per cent, the National Pharmaceutical Pricing Authority (NPPA) has done it again, this time marginally. According to a notification issued by the pricing authority, drug-eluting stents will be priced at ₹27,890 and bare metal stents at ₹7,660, excluding the goods and services tax (GST).

The authority has not broadened the categories of coronary stents, though there was industry demand for that. The order mentions only two categories of stents.

In a recent meeting with stakeholders, the NPPA had told multinational stent makers that the regulator would consider sub-categories for drug-eluting stents only if they could prove the superiority of their next-generation stents. The government had set up a committee to assess if sub-categories of drug-eluting stents should be considered by the NPPA.

At several platforms, multinational companies like Abbott, Boston Scientific, and Medtronic had been pushing for better prices for their next-generation stents. But the NPPA has not entertained their request to form categories. In fact, manufacturers, including Abbott, Medtronic, and Boston Scientific, decided to withdraw their stents after price control,

CLEARING THE BLOCKAGES

February 2017

- NPPA capped price of drug-eluting stents at ₹29,600
- Price of bare metal stents was capped at ₹7,260
- Multinational firms begin to evaluate withdrawal of 'next-generation' stents
- NPPA invoked Section 3 (i) of DPCO 2013 to stop companies from bringing down manufacturing and import of stents

January 2018

- Multinational stentmakers continue to bat for sub-categorisation of drug-eluting stents

Chinese stentmaker MicroPort entered India with its target-eluting stent after price cap was imposed.

While multinational firms have been upset with the way the cap was imposed, domestic stent manufacturers felt the price made them unviable. At the time of discussions with the NPPA on revising stent prices this year, domestic manufacturers argued for a higher ceiling price.

"The decision is disappointing. It will limit patient choice and the availability of innovative technologies. The only saving grace in the order is the NPPA's expression that it is open to receiving stakeholder views. Taking that in earnest, we will stay engaged," said Pavan Choudary, director-general, Medical Technology Association of India.

According to the NPPA, following the price cap on coronary stents, the share of domestic stentmakers has risen. Preliminary data suggests a four per cent shift in favour of domestic manufacturers.

Last year, on February 14, the pharmaceutical watchdog cut the price of coronary stents to ₹29,600 from as high as ₹200,000, a reduction of around 85 per cent. However, the price of another category of stents, bare metal stent, was capped at ₹7,260.

Trade margins were capped at 8 per cent along the complete supply chain as the NPPA observed unethical mark-ups in the maximum retail prices charged by manufacturers.

The NPPA used its extraordinary power of Para 19 of the Drug Price Control Order (DPCO) 2013 to cap the prices of coronary stents. The NPPA had invoked the Section 3 (i) of the DPCO, restricting companies from bringing down manufacturing and import of stents, to ensure there was no shortage of the devices.

Rajiv Nath, forum coordinator, Association of Indian Medical Device Industry, said, "We are happy with the NPPA's new decision to continue with its directive on price caps by not heeding to the lobby of multinational manufacturers. The single category on drug-eluting stents is scientific, and the continuation of the above stand gives confidence to the manufacturers. Manufacturers could have welcomed higher pricing to accommodate inflation. But the government can be assured of support from manufacturers."

Coincheck heist shows up holes in cryptocurrency rules

THOMAS WILSON & TAKAHIKO WADA
Tokyo, 12 February

After the Mt Gox cryptocurrency exchange was stung by a half-billion dollar theft in 2014, Japanese regulators swung into action. Their goal was to craft rules that both protected traders and allowed a promising sector to flourish. By last April, they thought they had arrived at a set of guidelines that did just that.

Japan's national system to oversee cryptocurrency trading was the world's first, rolled out even as policymakers elsewhere grappled with how to deal with the sector. Under the Japanese framework, some exchanges would be allowed to operate — even though they hadn't yet won regulatory approval.

One of those was Coincheck. Last month, hackers stole about $530 million from the Tokyo-based exchange, a theft rivalling Mt Gox's as one of the biggest ever for digital currency.

The Coincheck heist exposed flaws in Japan's system. And for some experts, it raised questions over the country's dash to regulate the industry — a sharp contrast to clampdowns by countries like South Korea and China. Interviews with a dozen government officials, lawmakers and cryptocurrency industry leaders depict a regulator that opted for relatively loose rules to help nurture an industry largely populated by start-ups. Japan's Financial Services Agency declined to comment. But proponents of its regulatory approach say the system and the hack were not connected.

"It's too much to say that the FSA or institutional design was lax because there was one hack," said former information technology vice-minister Mineyuki Fukuda, previously a supporter in parliament of promoting and regulating cryptocurrencies.

In the wake of the Mt Gox bankruptcy, Japan didn't know what to make of bitcoin. "It's not money," Finance Minister Taro Aso told reporters days after the exchange collapsed. "Does the Financial Services Agency have jurisdiction? The Finance Ministry? The Consumer Affairs Agency? The Ministry of Economy, Trade and

Policymakers across the world have grappled with how to deal with cryptocurrencies

Industry?" Amid the vacuum of oversight, the governing Liberal Democratic Party, seeing the fintech sector as a way to stimulate growth, initially called for the cryptocurrency industry to form a body to regulate itself.

That led to the formation of the Japan Authority of Digital Assets (JADA), comprising blockchain and cryptocurrency start-ups and entrepreneurs. When the FSA was later tasked with creating regulations for cryptocurrencies, it turned to JADA for help. The group lobbied for rules friendly to start-ups, like low capital requirements. "We had constant discussions with the FSA, giving technical information and ideas," said So Saito, a founding member of JADA and now general counsel of its successor, the Japan Blockchain Association (JBA).

The FSA's rules required exchanges to register, operate robust computer systems and address risk management. But they left the storage of assets to a set of non-binding guidelines. Exchanges should keep the encrypted keys needed to access digital money in "cold wallets" — for example, USB drives not connected to the internet — only if doing so didn't overly inconvenience customers, the guidelines said. In effect, the clause left no obstacle to Coincheck's holding $530 million worth of NEM crypto-coins in an online "hot wallet" — essentially a digital folder stored on a server — from which the funds were stolen.

Transfer unclaimed deposits to SCWF by March 1: IRDAI

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
New Delhi, 12 February

The Insurance Regulatory and Development Authority of India (Irdai) has asked all insurers to transfer the deposits of policyholders that have been laying unclaimed for over 10 years to the welfare fund by March 1.

"All insurers having unclaimed amounts of policyholders for a period of more than 10 years as on September 30, 2017 shall transfer the same to Senior Citizens' Welfare Fund (SCWF) on or before March 1, 2018," the Insurance Regulatory and Development Authority of India has said in a circular.

The directive comes under the Department of Economic Affairs accounting procedure for transfer of funds to SCWF. Life, non-life and health insurance service providers will have to comply to the SCWF

Rules, 2016 every year.

"The insurers shall make transfers to the consolidated fund of India on or before the 1st March, each year," Irdai said. An interest bearing account in the public fund of the government, SCWF has been set up for promoting welfare of senior citizens through schemes such as old age pensions, long term savings instruments, promotion of health care and nutrition and affordable health care among others.
